Studiosity

Direct your students to after-hours study help

Students have always studied after the bell goes, in the evenings, on weekends.

That's why study support is available after hours as well.

Your school or library provides access to Studiosity to ensure students always feel supported, to improve core academic literacy, numeracy, and integrity skills, and to build confidence. Extensive due diligence has been conducted on Studiosity's globally-recognised integrity, privacy, and quality assurance policies.

Your Studiosity service is available at studiosity.com/access with a school email address or library card Member number.

What support is delivered?

Students will receive feedback around academic skills, English-writing skills, maths, sciences, research, and referencing. The support will never cover curricula content, and the 'help not answers' policy ensures students will be prompted to come to their own conclusions.

Once in their personal Studiosity dashboard, Students can choose to:

a. Upload any assignment draft for same-day, English-writing feedback.

b. Connect live to a maths, science, English Subject Specialist, for when students need help 'right now' after hours.

Your role in encouraging help seeking

There is no more respected authority than a student's own teacher or trusted librarians.

You can:

+ Remind students to find their approved Studiosity service at studiosity.com/access.

+ Add a prompt in your lesson plans or student groups, instructing students to get writing feedback the week before their assignment is due, so that they have time to consider the feedback. Some teachers ask that students attach their feedback pdf to their final submission.

+ Add a reminder about all your support services to out-of-office responses and email signatures, so that students always have timely help, even if after hours.
