

Evaluate academic abilities for timely intervention, at scale

Studiosity's new Academic Writing Evaluation Service

Gain visibility of your students' academic skills and identify which students require what type of core academic skills support, early in the semester, with the new Studiosity Academic Writing Evaluation (AWE) service.

Actionable insight into academic skills

Studiosity's new Academic Writing Evaluation Service provides institutions with the opportunity to assess whole cohorts of students, at scale, early in the academic year.

Your teaching staff can't know their students' academic writing abilities until they have submitted their first assignment.

Studiosity will give your institution the opportunity to receive actionable insights into your students' writing skill levels in one comprehensive report for timely, customised follow-up and intervention, before they submit their work for assessment.

You will be able to integrate this data via API into your learning analytics system or preferred data visualisation tool to keep track of each student's academic skill development.

How does it work?

Your nominated cohort of students completes an academic writing task and are then evaluated on their academic writing capabilities according to the Studiosity Academic Writing Evaluation Framework.

The Framework has been developed by Studiosity's Academic Services team headed up by Chief Academic Officer, Professor Judyth Sachs.

The students' results will be visible for you in a detailed report flagging students who struggled. You can then offer additional, targeted academic support based on each student's needs, such as supplementary writing courses or face-to-face assistance, to help them progress in their English writing skill development.

Key benefits:

- Visibility into academic writing capabilities for each student, at scale, via a self-service reporting dashboard
- Actionable insights into each student's writing skills using the Academic Writing Evaluation Framework
- Opportunity for timely intervention for students who have been flagged in specific academic literacy areas
- Engaging students within the familiar Studiosity interface

The AWE Service complements Studiosity's existing suite of study support services.
