

During this pandemic I have really focused on improving and working on my passion that is, baking.

In the past baking has helped me cope through the trials and turbulences of life and this time was no different as well. My family has been my support system, they have always pushed me to further explore this passion and work on my own recipes. The one that I absolutely fell in love was the chocolate buttercream cake. It was rich and tasted heavenly. When I started icing, for a change I didn't try to perfect it by making it smooth. In that moment I realized that regardless of the imperfect icing, it'll taste amazing; similarly, regardless of our imperfections we all will reach our goals and find stability and happiness in life.